

Dr. Sousana Papadopoulou is an Assoc. Professor at the Department of Nutritional Science and Dietetics of International Hellenic University (IHU) and specialized in Sports Nutrition and Sarcopenia. She completed her under-graduate studies and her doctoral thesis at the Department of Physical Education and Sports Science at Aristotle University of Thessaloniki (AUTH), Greece and a second B.Sc in Nutrition and Dietetics at the Department of Nutrition and Dietetics, Technological Educational Institution of Thessaloniki (ATEITH), Greece. Her research interests include: 1. the effect of systematic exercise and nutrition on anthropometric characteristics, body composition, bone density and biochemical indexes of high-level athletes and non-athletes, 2. the impact of physical activity levels and dietary habits on the health status of various population groups. She was a module Leader in the research program “Research, Create, Innovate” of the Hellenic Institute of Research and Innovation, entitled: “Study of the special nutritional requirements and preferences of consumers of different age groups to improve the effectiveness of the EGGPRO egg albumen product line”, Athens, Greece, 2020-present. She was a scientific collaborator of ATEITH in research programs in the field of Nutrition and Physical Activity such as Joint Action on Nutrition and Physical Activity, 2015-2017, “Alliance for Health and Nutrition”, 2013-2014 and the Creating a Database for the Nutrition of Greek Athletes, 2004-2006. She has published 110 papers in prestigious international scientific journals, 30 papers in Greek journals and has made 170 announcements at scientific conferences. She has also won 10 awards for her scientific work. She has 2410 citations and 21 h index.